Andreal DeskLock [April-2022]

DesktopLock is a small yet effective utility that can help you lock your PC without having to log off. It features a friendly interface and a neat layout, but it is possible to customise some parameters when need. DesktopLock settings consist of password, time left until the computer is locked, duration, and even a message that will be displayed to end-users when the desktop is locked. Our tests proved that DesktopLock works flawlessly, although the number of available options is limited. You cannot view the configuration window, unlock the system, or set up a new password until the default one is provided. It is worth noting that DesktopLock can interact with other applications, such as Microsoft Outlook, so you need to be careful when opening files that are protected by other locks. Default parameters are provided when we first log on and they will remain the same until the next reboot. You are not allowed to modify any of them, however, to do so you need to first reset the program to its original settings. DesktopLock can lock your PC at any time, which is an even more useful feature than the one provided by the other locks on the Windows system. For example, if you leave your computer unattended for a little while and would like to come back to it later, you would need to unlock it by entering the default password. The interface is easy to understand, even for beginners, and the entire process is controlled with only a few buttons, which will let you use the software as a straightforward utility. DesktopLock doesn't interfere with any other applications and doesn't consume a lot of system resources. All in all, DesktopLock is a handy tool that can be used by all type of users to protect your data from unauthorized viewing. 1.8 What's new in version 1.8: 1.
