This is a title but I will be keeping an eye on the author, I think it is by Vladimir Prelog who I am not too familiar with, but I don't know if the first portion of the title is correct. I have had an issue with it, I made sure that my antivirus software did not detect the file as malware. Then, I used a couple of different programs and neither of them detected it as malware. I am not sure why it did not like it. My antivirus software marked it as malicious. Everywhere else, it seems to be fine. As I am not sure why it did not like it. Because it is malware. ., just did not like it. Malware is malware. The malware software did what malware is supposed to do, wreck your computer. Because I made sure that my antivirus software did not detect the file as malware. Does that mean that all the other software did? Do you have malware on your computer that was not detected by the antivirus? And do you have antivirus on your computer? I used a couple of different programs and neither of them detected it as malware Exactly: it did not detect it as malware. Malware detection software does not work that way. To be effective, it looks for patterns of behavior that malware uses, and by including every known malware script, it keeps your computer safe from every known malware script. But malware detection does not take into account all the different ways malware can wreck your computer. Malware analysis is a different discipline. There are multiple types, not all of which require any code to be run. Some merely involve examining the operating system. Others involve examining the file system. Still others involve retrieving information from databases or the internet. Malware can bring down your entire network if it brings down a router, or it can just destroy your photo collection if it destroys your photo library. Do you have malware on your computer that was not detected by the antivirus? And do you have antivirus on your computer? If you do, the answer is simple. The author or manufacturer of the malware did not provide you with the anti-malware protection you were looking for. They thought the malware would be harmless to you, so they made it as harmless as possible. On the other hand, it is 1cb139a0ed
