I'm trying to guess wich country a contact belongs to using a database from which I extract a list of contacts. I'm parsing through a recordset looking for an entry with the potentiality of having a.Name field full of characters. My MSDN example for the GetFullName method in System.Globalization.RegionInfo is very simple, just the code to parse the name in the example recordset. I got to the point of trying the following code which did the job but my gut tells me that I'm not doing this the right way. My testing table's column is a varchar(50). Is this method that I'm using safe, does it have any security issues, is it likely to cause any performance issues? public string GetFullName(object obj) { var name = ""; if (obj is string) { name = obj as string; } else if (obj is bool) { name = Convert.ToString((bool)obj); } else if (obj is int) { name = Convert.ToString((int)obj); } else if (obj is DateTime) { name = obj.ToString("dd/MM/yyyy"); } else { name = (string)obj; } var ci = CultureInfo.InvariantCulture; name = ci.TextInfo.ToTitleCase(name); var country = new RegionInfo(ci.LCID); name = country.GetFullName(name); name = name.Replace("@ " , @ 3e33713323
