Organizations of the education, social services, health and justice sectors have a tradition of working together in their communities, but are also increasingly receiving direct funding for this work from federal government and private foundations. Considering the rise of governmental involvement in policy areas that are traditionally perceived as private sector, the nonprofit sector now has many implications for industry. Betsy Glaser, Director of Industry Engagement, CATO Institute will outline the key implications of the "policy pendulum" for the nonprofit sector and will describe some of the key factors that can inform your sector's response to current challenges and opportunities. A "blanket" of utility companies has ordered the heat pump program to shut down in late August. The shutdown means Maine Cooling cannot sell air conditioners to any homeowner or business customer using Eversource's system for the remainder of the year. "They want to shut us down and they're telling all the customers to stop using it and stop buying it," says CEO Ben Macpherson. The shutdown in Maine was first reported by WENY-TV in Elmira, New York. There will be further widespread shut-downs next week.

Everything you need to know about FlowJo FlowJo is used to visualize your data as a time series, so that you can see changes over time. With FlowJo, you can either use a mixed flow cytometry sample analysis (e.g., to analyze a single surface marker over time) or a single-cell only analysis (e.g.,to analyze a single surface marker in all cells). FlowJo is therefore commonly used for analysis of total cell populations, such as for cell count and characterization. FlowJo also supports analysis of single cell populations, and it therefore provides the ability to do single-cell studies that are increasingly important in biology and clinical research. .
