What's New In DVDCopy?

1. Drag and drop your DVD movies to DVD Copy to load your DVDs to be copied. 2. Select all the DVD movies you wish to copy or deselect the ones you don't. 3. Choose an output folder for each selected movie you want to copy. 4. Press the 'Copy' button to start copying movies to your computer. All the video files, including sub-directories of selected videos, will be copied to the output folder you specified, so you should make sure the location you want to save the files is available to DVD Copy. DVD Copy will be launched with the path of the selected file ready as the first argument. You should also note that the 'Copy' function will not copy files that are protected by Windows (DVDs with 'DVD Protection' or 'Content Copying' are usually protected by Windows; please check the file extension or the description in Windows folder if you are wondering). DVD Copy can't copy such protected files. DVD Copy is only able to copy Content Copying-protected DVDs. If you are copying a single DVD, you may use DVD Copy's 'Single DVD Copy' option that is often easier and faster for copying single DVD files. If you want to copy the selected or all the DVD files from DVD to a single DVD, you may use the command prompt. Type the following command in the command prompt (remember to type the path of the output DVD): `cd /d "C:\Users\Public\DVD1*" Then press Enter to start copying. Step-By-Step Guide to Copy DVD Files You need no special knowledge to copy DVDs, although the process may sometimes be tricky. For example, there are various file paths that are sometimes different from one DVD to another. So check out the guide below: Load the DVD movies to be copied Before copying the DVDs, you need to load them to the DVD Copy. DVD Copy allows you to load DVD files by dragging and dropping the files to the DVD Copy interface. Select the files you wish to copy Most of the time, you can copy the files and folders that you wish. However, if you want to copy a single file in a specific folder, you need to specifically select the file and the specific folder. Choose an output folder The final step is to choose a suitable output folder where the video files will be saved.`
