Among the evidence he would have wanted his expert to evaluate was whether the $28,000 Scott apparently diverted to himself from Boackle's company, Carbide International, was a substantial amount. One UIViewController for reading characters from the table-view (to update the table). One UIViewController for the selected cell in the table view. So, it goes: UIViewController -> CharacterViewController -> UITableViewController What I want is that the CharacterViewController loads automatically every time I open the app. The reason for this is that I want the user to be able to add a character while the table-view is updated. This is the code I have: AppDelegate:
