But to some, there is far more to the story. In a riveting new documentary, The Smoking Gun's Susan Dalton traces the history of the purported infiltration of the Trump campaign by Russians to unmask the truth about the explosive issue — and uncover who could really be behind it. Some of the most powerful names in politics — including Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. John McCain — are subpoenaed to testify. But neither Donald Trump nor anyone in his camp end up answering for the charges, and everyone involved is forced to defend their conduct in a world of lies and half-truths. A spokesperson for the Trump campaign puts it this way: "If you have lost your health, please call us. We will get you a free health clinic. If you lost your manhood, please call us. We will get you a free probate and a lawyer."Former CIA Director John Brennan appeared on MSNBC to discuss, of all things, the future of the U.S. election. It was his first interview since joining the network. And it was a wild one. Brennan stumbled his way through an answer on how Russia was threatening the integrity of the election. Brennan: The Russians are not going to allow for a fair election process to take place. MSNBC's Chris Hayes: What do you base that on? Brennan: Because they don't believe that the results of this election are going to be legitimate, and they are conducting information warfare against the United States. And that's just the beginning. Brennan had more trouble answering questions about President Trump, defending his accusations against the FBI and arguing that Trump will be in the White House for the next four years. He did manage to come out on top, though. He accused White House officials of engaging in a "soft coup" to remove Trump from office. Watch the

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a piston type oxygen sensor to be used for detecting the concentration of oxygen contained in a sample gas being measured, and more particularly to a piston type oxygen sensor having an improved output characteristic to be used for detecting the oxygen concentration of the exhaust gas of an internal combustion engine.

2. Description of the Prior Art As a conventional method for detecting the oxygen concentration of the exhaust gas of an internal combustion engine, there is known a method in which a pair of electrodes, formed in a planar shape, are disposed in an exhaust pipe, and a reference gas and a sample gas, which are introduced through an inlet pipe, are brought into contact with the electrodes, respectively, so that the following external resistance is applied to the electrodes:

$$R = R_{00} + \alpha(A_{11} - A_{00}) + \beta(O_{22} - A_{00}) + (C_{11} - C_{00})$$ where R_{00} : external resistance of the electrodes under the reference gas atmosphere, A_{11} , A_{00} : external resistance of the electrodes under the sample gas atmosphere, O_{22} : oxygen concentration of the sample gas, A_{00} : average external resistance of the electrode pair under the reference gas atmosphere, $C_{11} - C_{00}$: difference between the electrode potentials under the sample gas atmosphere, respectively. PA1 an oxygen concentration detecting section including a reference electrode and a measuring electrode in a cylindrical shape, the reference electrode being covered with a reference atmosphere gas, the measuring electrode being contacted with a sample gas, PA1 a cylindrical piston section having a first and a second opening, the first opening being in communication with the interior of the oxygen concentration detecting section and the second opening
