A New Concept in Photo Editing Adobe Photoshop CS5 comes with a whole new concept in photo-editing applications: the ability to make adjustments with only a click of the mouse or tablet. These alterations are used to correct out-of-focus areas, fix mistakes, and improve the look of images by changing the tone and brightness, or by adding a vignette or desaturated colors. It is also possible to use the adjustment tools to retouch a person's face and remove unwanted objects — such as pet hair or a pimple. Once you create an image that you feel is perfect, you can send it off to be published in print or online in an instant. Preserving Photos Although Photoshop CS5 is a great image-editing program, it doesn't do a great job of preserving the quality of your images. This stems from the fact that it doesn't offer a lot of quality options. It can repair faulty images, but it cannot edit out blemishes and other imperfections that can be found in most photos. You can use Photoshop CS5 to correct problems and make the image appear more true to life. However, it's best to have a few extra pixels available to Photoshop CS5 users. Therefore, it's recommended that you use Photoshop CS5 together with an image-editing program such as Adobe Photoshop Elements, which is designed for that purpose. Getting the Most Out of Photoshop The following list provides a rundown of the different Photoshop functions available for getting the most out of Photoshop CS5: * Reducing and fixing images: Includes the Enhance, Reduce Noise, Sharpen, and Red Eye tools. * Retouching: Provides a screen of tools for manipulating faces and improving the lighting, color, and clarity of images. * Creating and sharing images: Allows for creating and saving images through the use of layers. You can choose from a number of templates that match the look and feel of the current trends in printing and web publishing.

iOS 7 will support locked iPhones — an iPhone will remain locked if the user has not paid for the “unlimited usage” service provided by T-Mobile. One of the features most hotly anticipated in iOS 7 is the introduction of wireless carriers and wireless providers. While the carriers had been rumored for months, in part because of Apple’s insistence that iOS 7 be Carrier Independent, today iMore published a tweet saying that Apple is actually leaning towards a carrier-friendly approach — and T-Mobile has been specifically mentioned. Once you purchase “unlimited usage” (or some other amount of usage) and use a consistent mobile data plan it will be possible to receive tethering for that number of minutes. Support for wireless tethering will also be another major addition to iOS 7, when Apple has finished the work it is doing on iOS 7. Another point to be made is that Apple is not obligated to go this route with iOS 7 and may well choose not to support it. However, the fact that Apple is discussing it with carriers is a positive sign. With T-Mobile, for example, it will be possible to get a smartphone and have a contract with the carrier without being able to unlock the phone. With Verizon and AT&T, tethering will already be possible. And T-Mobile wants Apple to go this route. “While Apple had been working with AT&T, Verizon and other mobile carriers to gain approval for the feature, T-Mobile executives have told Reuters they have long-hoped for Apple to support the technology, though it has not been easy to convince the iPhone maker to play ball.” Except now a T-Mobile spokesperson claims that neither Apple nor T-Mobile is talking about the idea of more carriers supporting wireless tethering (having a slow down on tethering would be bad). They say that Apple and T-Mobile are simply discussing how carriers can make this possible. When asked about Verizon and AT&T, the T-Mobile spokesperson told Reuters, “We are talking to Apple about the possibilities, but we don’t have any agreements in place.” Will T-Mobile actually be the first to support carrier-locked smartphones for tethering? Who knows, but it is at least exciting to think about and it appears that Apple is open to making it happen. Update: Although T-Mobile announced yesterday that it would support wireless tethering, it is not entirely clear what that means for smartphones that have

Roughly ten months before the world ended, I was at a New Year’s Eve party at my friend’s apartment in Los Angeles. I asked my friend, Robert Caron, how he was doing. We got into a detailed discussion about the world’s end, with me taking the lead. I knew that March would be an important time in the life of humanity, because we were about to witness the return of Jesus Christ, and I wanted to be ready to talk about that with my friend. Robert, a devout Catholic, fretted that the world would not be ready to accept the return of Jesus Christ. He was convinced that the human race would simply have another “false prophet” come on the scene, calling himself Jesus Christ, to try to take over the world. I suggested that we just do what the Christians had done the last time Jesus had returned: Have the disciples round up the first believers, which would be us. It was late, and we began talking about the types of people who would believe. I mentioned that I was a logical person, and some of the other people there were as well. We speculated on who would be most likely to believe. I mentioned that I was also a libertarian. I see the world as a place where individuals can do what they want, and how they want. I said that I thought that this type of person would be very receptive to what Jesus was about. Several people disagreed, but I stood my ground. I didn’t think that this event was about one man telling people how to live, but about the way people lived their lives. I pointed out that being a libertarian was a necessity for participating in the world. And so, the party was about to break up, and the conversation turned to music. I mentioned that I had an album, Time Machine, by Tom Lehrer called “The Vatican Rag”. He had written a satirical version of the scene that followed, written in 1947 after an international incident in which the Vatican was complicit. I had played this in the past, and was quite proud of it. I said that I had performed it at the New Year’s Eve party. We then sang the song in its entirety, and some people did a satirical version of it that had a sense of humor. Robert became more involved in what we were doing, and I began to explain to him some of the other songs on the album. He was a great fan of the album, and
