First close any running applications on your computer. Download the crack, patch, or game setup from the link you downloaded from above. Open the download using your preferred download manager (i.e. IDM, DownLoadAgent, Multiget, etc.) Run the setup, wait for the installation to finish. Play. Enjoy. Browser offline caching - How to not have to wait for server? I'm working on an internal website which is probably around 100 kb in size. This is usually fine, but sometimes if one of the pages is on a slow link, the site will wait for that page to fully load. My thought process was to just allow a browser to cache the page locally and just load the page while offline. This way, the user doesn't have to wait. I created a.htaccess file, and then added the following code: Header set Cache-Control "max-age=604800, public" I wanted to test this, so I made the site public. Unfortunately, even with this code I am still having to wait for the page to load. Is there a better way to cache an internal site for an offline user? A: To get around this, you need to use an Expires Header, like this:

ExpiresActive On ExpiresDefault MST ExpiresByType image/gif MST ExpiresByType image/png MST ExpiresByType image/jpeg MST ExpiresByType image/jpg MST ExpiresByType image/x-icon MST ExpiresByType application/x-shockwave-flash SWF ExpiresByType application/x-web-app-manifest+json+woff2 JS ExpiresByType application/
