FontConfig provides a configurable, high-performance font cache. It saves the cache data in either a portable extra-large binary database format (eXtra Large Database, or XLDB) or in a folder structure resembling that of Windows' font cache. FontConfig provides facilities for creating, enumerating, and removing fonts from the cache, as well as for controlling the visibility of fonts and glyphs within the cache. FontConfig comes with a set of C functions (fcbttr.h) for manipulating the cache. Because of the versatile design, the software can be used with any high-performance C-based language. FontConfig is open source under the GNU Lesser General Public License. which tries to find, delete or remove various leftovers that may appear on your computer system after you install some programs. The list of such "wasted" files may be quite long. Moreover, these leftovers may be slightly different each time you run your computer. Nevertheless, it is still possible to remove these leftovers. The most common useless files that appear on your system after you install some programs are those that store fonts. However, it's not the only type of leftovers that may slow down your computer's performance. Besides, even the so-called "wasted" files can be useful for you. Thus, AdwCleaner Pro allows you to do that. You can find many useless leftovers on your computer system after you install some programs. Among these leftovers are those files that usually contain fonts. However, the most common leftovers can be something else. For instance, these leftovers may be the files that were leftovers of some already-installed programs. Or, they can be the remnants of your games. Nevertheless, if you uninstall some program, you will get rid of these leftovers. First, you will learn how to remove these leftovers. Then, you will learn how to clean your browser cache.
