Should I call return new Console.Out(); or return this; to return a value from a method? I want to return the Console.Out value, so I call new Console.Out(); instead of this: A: No, you should not new up a new Console.Out instead you should use Console.Out directly. If your question is should new be used to create a new instance of a class instead of using the class itself, then no, you should never use new. What's important is that you should choose appropriate data to represent your objects. A: new Console.Out() is wrong, it should be: Console.Out. instead. Today we'll be talking about a defense initiative called "Project Sentry." Sentry is an operational investigation, search and rescue effort aimed at locating missing climbers, skiers and hikers. We'll also be talking about the Fall 2015 "In Remembrance" Crime and Delinquency Report. [#14] If you are interested in becoming a listener to the podcast, please visit our Patreon page. [21.08.] Project Sentry Project Sentry is a resource available to all the law enforcement agencies in the state of Maine for the purpose of collecting and sharing information related to missing persons. So that includes people that don't live in Maine or that live in Maine but are visiting. Part of the reason that Project Sentry exists is that more and more people are going missing in Maine. [24.04.] "In Remembrance" Maine reports on the use of force deaths in the state of Maine, and that includes fatal shootings, criminal assaults, and law enforcement intervention. A significant increase in the number of fatal shootings this past year was reflected in the overall number of law enforcement
