If you want to learn Photoshop you'll be motivated at first to avoid using Photoshop. You'll be drawn to alternative options such as Pixelmator or GIMP, because you'll want to know that you can get the same result with fewer commands. But here's the thing: you can still do a lot with Photoshop. You can do amazing things that will surprise even the pros. And even with Photoshop, there are times when it's better to use alternatives. Here's an exercise we can use to show you how much you can do in Photoshop alone. PSD Template: There are 5 layers, the PSD has a resolution of 300 DPI. The layers are: background, main color (black, white, light gray, dark gray) and 5 color swatches. You'll notice that there are different layers on the original image. Each layer defines the image's various components. In this tutorial, we'll highlight the limitations that exist with each layer and demonstrate how the layers can be controlled separately. The Black Layers Layer 1: The Black Layers Layer 1 is the black background. This is the layer with which you'll start. In Photoshop, the layers on the right side of the Layers panel represent the "background" or "clipping" layers. The layers on the left side of the Layers panel define the primary object within the image. You can edit the black background layer with a range of techniques including: Removing edges. You can use the Eraser tool to remove edges by selecting and then un-selecting the eraser. The selection box will darken as you click around to show where objects are. You can also use the Fuzzy Select Tool (the little black square with the rubber band, or the Fuzzy Select Tool) to remove black dots and creases in an image. Applying lighting/shading. You can use Adjustment Layers to create selective lighting and shading that can only affect areas of the background. Layers like these can be applied and removed and can be used to adjust the background. Adding text. Even a background image can have text. In the example above, the text was added using the Smart Object layer. In this tutorial, we'll edit the black background layer to make it a strip. The Layer has a Width and Height of 300 pixels. The viewport is set to 300 pixels.
